The Artillery Barracks in Halle were evacuated of troops between 15 and 17 Mar in 1947, personnel being moved eastward. The barracks were reoccupied the following week by motorized troops. Soviet troops in this city are said to be receiving a daily lecture lasting an hour on the nature and the conduct of the coming war with the lest. Fürstenberg/Oder 9. A dynamite depot is located outside this town, where explosives are stored in 25-pound canisters. Apprehended "line-crossers" are used as conscript labor and are threatened with deportation to Siberia if they mention the depot after their release. The following vehicle noted on military transport outside the Tank Brigade Headquarters at August Rebelstr. 7, on several consecutive days in March: 50X1-HUM This tank brigade arrived from Rostock about Christmas 1946. On 21 March 1947 their tanks were being loaded on to railroad cars at a freight siding in Wolfen, and it appears that they are moving out again. Lühlhausen 11. Red Army troops with heavy weapons, estimated at divisional strength, are stationed in this area, having arrived from the Mast. Velten 12. Since 20 February 1947 the Soviet units stationed in this town have been leaving. Up to March 1947 approximately 6,000 troops were stationed there; now there are about 400, and it is expected that these will have left by mid-May. The komendatura has been split up, the larger part having gone to Nauen where the headquarters of all supply units in Mark Brandenburg is located (Zentrale der Nachschubeinheiten). The various staffs which came to Velten from Mahlsdorf left in February 1947 for Dresden and Corlitz. Of the troops previously stationed there, engineers and railroad units have been transferred to Hungary and Southern Poland. I wow has been idicated as one of the places to which these units
